

Your situation

You have obtained consent from participants for sharing research materials, including their personal data, via a third-party data repository.

You promised participants that specific identifying information would be removed from the dataset, but did not remove this information.

You continue to hold participants' contact details (e.g. addresses, telephone numbers).

You cannot share your data

Since you continue to hold participants' contact details there are two options:

- recontact participants and renegotiate data-sharing conditions
- or definitively remove the identifying information you have specified and carry out another shareability evaluation
